Aminopeptidase P (A-pep) was studied in adult sea bass (Dicentrarchus labrax L.) liver. The enzyme was characterized by immunohistochemistry and immunocytochemistry, HPLC, and the molecular analysis of the cDNA. The level of A-pep in normal fish was high in liver, intestine and kidney, where it was concentrated in the brush border of enterocytes and in the luminal pole of proximal tubules, mainly in the S3 segment. Intestines of fish treated with phenylthiourea showed weak immunostaining, suggesting that the enzyme may be involved in the intestinal absorption of this aminopeptidase. The monoclonal antibody was used to study A-pep during periods of growth (0-400 g) and after stress (temperature, hypoxia, and acute or chronic exposure to beta-hexachlorocyclohexane). A-pep immunoreactivity was significantly higher in animals after stress and in less than 400 g fish compared to controls. In both experimental situations A-pep was mainly detected in liver, and it was increased in the animals studied after stress. Messenger RNA from normal liver and intestine was also studied, showing high levels in intestine, whereas levels in liver were considerably lower. A-pep cDNA was isolated and sequenced; it contains 363 nucleotides and encodes a protein of 118 amino acids with a calculated molecular mass of 12.6 kDa. The amino acid sequence shows significant homology to that of A-pep from other teleosts.Q: Is $\mathcal{C}_{G}$ an algebra?
