in reason 6.5.3, the button in the toolbar is the play/pause button. this is the same button as in reason 6.2 and prior. in prior versions, the button is the stop button - reason 6.3 has changed the functionality of the button. the 'play' button of the reason 6.5.3 crack version is used for clicking and dragging sequences of audio files or for bringing up the play/pause dialog box. it is also used to press the play button in a sequencer. if you have reason 6.5.3 crack and want to open your reason 6.3 crack songs in reason 8.1 or higher, you can do so by selecting the reason 6.3 crack song, and right clicking the song, and selecting open in 8.1 reason. reason 6.5.3 crack may be best used for recording and editing audio. you can use the reason version of ableton live for midi recording and editing. however, i think that reason is a better choice for audio editing because it has more audio functionality, and because the reason app is included for free, while ableton live is not. some reason users want to use reason as a sequencing application, but also want to record midi and audio simultaneously. for this, reason has an intuitive recording mode called record.once in record mode, you can record midi and audio simultaneously. you can record audio with reason's instrument samplers or external samplers, and you can record midi in various ways, including using the midi keyboard or using the reason audio signal to control external equipment. you can also record multiple tracks and use any sample or instrument for any of the tracks. the reason series was intended as an alternative to the well-known propellerhead reason le series. reason tracks are very similar to the underlying.rtm files that propellerhead uses, but reason tracks have a few additional features such as tempo-synced effects, customizable arpeggios, and an arpeggio section, allowing you to make chords and progressions that sound more like a full piano.

in reason you will find your project/track/layer/layer and midi settings. to load a project for the first time you simply load it. you can then create and save new projects using the same dialog. you can also do this on the track level. the first time you load a project it will ask you to name it. i always use a project name that is in the same way as my reason project names. once the project has been loaded, you can then open the project and edit it however you see fit. now all you have to do is create your tracks. reason has an integrated track maker. press 'r' and you will see the track maker. you can enter a name for the track, or make it 'untitled'. you can then choose your instruments or synth patches. you can even add an external synth, or set the synth to a sequence and place it on a track. my name is thomas and i am from germany.
