For this I need to run the application on the iPhone simulator. However, when I run the application on the simulator I get an message in the terminal saying: dyld: Library not loaded: /tmp/appName/Payload/Frameworks/libMobileGestalt.dylib Referenced from: /Users/ssf/Library/Developer/CoreSimulator/Devices/24E2534F-EC76-469D-9391-78F6D1DC66E8/data/Containers/Bundle/Application/1B2A1D2E-05A0-4E29-A18E-A8927D0C0E61/appName.app/appName Reason: image not found Abort trap: 6 The other applications run without any issues and can be used after that. This is only the one that needs to be run. This application only existed on the device. The application does not exist in the simulator. I was able to use the application after it was installed from the iPhone app store. However, the company no longer offers a way to install apps on devices. I don't know if I should contact the company and ask how to make a dSYM file from the release package, or what else could I do to fix this issue. A: This is likely because the company was using the libMobileGestalt.dylib file that is kept on your devices device in order to turn it into a binary application, but the issue is because the application was built for the iPhone simulator and it needs a device to work properly. I'm not familiar with the binary you're using, but I'm guessing it probably has a "use on device only" flag. This flag can be found in the application's bundle file. You'll likely have to get the company to re-examine its applications, and then if possible have them re-submit them to the app store, so that they can use a 04aeff104c
