I have a GUI editor. And every time I debug, I found this message under Project ► Info ► Scratch Library ► Sharedprefs. The sharedprefs class is a subclass of Preferences. message The sharedprefs. This class represents the shared preferences on the system. Its values are most likely written and read by one or more of your applications and thus should be backed up. I was not able to understand the meaning of this message. It will be of great help if someone explains this to me.

Please do, if you can. A: Shared Preferences is a subclass of Preferences and has some default values defined in the default constructor. Shared Preferences This class represents the shared preferences on the system. As you can see, there is no settings file, there are only default values for private, get and set methods. There are many reasons to save a preferences and save it in the filesystem. You can have many instances of your application, and one or more of them may have it's own preferences and settings. There is no reason to save preferences in the sharedpreferences file. It is an implementation detail, and not required at all. A farewell to the "geniuses" of the magazine business? I don't know how to begin to get over this." That was the first word out of Lara Buick's mouth when we got off the phone yesterday. Since 2003, Buick has been the editor and chief contributing writer of Seventeen magazine, an online spinoff of the popular teen publication that was originally published as a section of Cosmopolitan. But earlier this month, she announced that she was leaving the job to start a new job. "It's a bittersweet day because
